

International Blended Learning Seminar

War in European Memory: A Focus on Museums and Exhibitions

The international MA seminar with participants from Lucerne, Paris, Cologne, Berlin, Nijmegen and Warsaw focuses on the analysis of practices and narratives of memory in Europe with regard to war. The construction, public usage – politics of history – contestation and transformation of memory of wars over time will be approached by fusing concepts of memory studies and public history, focusing especially on museums and exhibitions. Against the background of approaches of memory studies (practices, narratives, affects of memory), the seminar aims at an in-depth analytical perspective on past and present constructions of European memories of war and their complex relation to national (and regional) memories in museums.

This international seminar presents a unique opportunity for the collaboration of students from a variety of European countries. Apart from online and live sessions, the exchange of ideas, reflection on texts and analysis of primary sources in small international groups are key elements of the seminar. Working in small groups, students will produce short projects (for example collaboratively elaborated papers, blog posts, online live presentations, videos, podcasts, etc.).

The seminar will consist of weekly online sessions between October 16 and December 15, 2023 and a voluntary on-site workshop in Dresden in April or May 2024.

- English is the main language of communication.
- Participants are in principle MA students in the study programmes of the six partner Universities.
- Modes of teaching and communication:
 - collaborative work in groups with outputs in various possible formats (papers, videos, podcasts)
 - group discussions in live online seminars
 - two-day workshop in Dresden in April or May 2024 (trip and accommodation financed)
- Students will acquire 3 ECTS for participation and activities during the semester. Additional ECTS are possible in relation to additional work done according to the requirements of the respective University.
- Semester dates: October 16-December 15, 2023.
